

VICE-PRESIDENT FOR LEARNING INNOVATION

Dublin City University (DCU) is establishing the position of Vice-President for Learning Innovation. This represents an exciting opportunity for a senior academic with extensive experience and a well-developed reputation in university teaching and learning to make a significant contribution to the future of DCU as it enters its next stage of development.

The person appointed will be responsible for the formulation of DCU's teaching and learning strategy and for championing learning innovation within and on behalf of DCU. The post will provide a focus for the academic community involved in implementing our teaching and learning mission and provide leadership for the ongoing expansion and refinement of the University's delivery mechanisms and support infrastructure.

Reflecting the seniority of the post the person appointed would normally have achieved the rank of Professor or Associate Professor.

An attractive salary, commensurate with experience, will be offered for the post.

Application forms should be completed and returned by 10 January 2003. However late applications will be accepted after this date up to completion of the short listing process which is expected to be achieved by late January 2003.
